New mini-game modes New characters New achievements What's New in Version 3.0.2: Halloween: A new mini-game mode! Joystick-enabled Android tablet and Apple iPad support Performance and graphical improvements Puppeteer is a new platform game from indie developer l-mage. The main character is the Puppeteer: a tiny device who can control Puppeteers, the former consciousnesses of people in the real world. The puppeteer can communicate with the real world via two video cameras located on the Puppeteer’s head. The player must use the Puppeteer to guide the puppet into performing amazing tricks and animating a variety of mini-graphics and characters. By collecting the puppets, the player can interact with the puppeteer’s “greatest creation”, which is in the form of a girl. The mini-Puppeteers are initially trapped in the Puppeteer, and the player must get them to wander into an alternate and very different reality. Each world has different rules and conditions, and the different worlds are interconnected. If the player succeeds in doing this successfully enough times, the player will be able to collect the puppets within that world in order to unlock additional mini-worlds. Characters from eight different worlds await in Puppeteer, and the game features eight unique puppeteers which can be controlled by the player with the command line or a joystick. The mini-Puppeteers each have a unique look and personality, and their appearance depends on the world in which they are found. The characters may have multiple outfits which the player can switch at any time. In addition, the mini-Puppeteers each contain two different masks, which represent their attitude and personality. The mini-Puppeteers are visually expressive and can perform a variety of tricks in any world. The trick performed is dependent on the puppet type and the mask associated with that type. For example, a Marvelous Fox Mask can only

Virtual Reality Revolution

A bridge between the physical and the virtual worlds

When I first got my HTC Vive, I was immediately intrigued about the possibilities of virtual reality. Throughout the years more and more people got it, thanks to easier adoption and cheaper prices, VR quickly became one of the hottest topics among gamers, developers and architects.

What if you could go hiking in the Swiss Alps, you are the passenger in a rickshaw, travel through space or walking along the well known canal of Amsterdam?

Since the pretty much sophisticated steam VR gear is not that affordable for me yet and is not yet available over here, you will have to make do with Hello Puppets! for now, my current favorite VR game.

I am a big fan of VR games so it will come as no big surprise, I will tell you in the start why Hello Puppets! has impressed me and convinced me for a long time to play it over Daydream.

Most VR games focus on a pure immersion, Hello Puppets! goes one step further by also showing you the real world around you. That’s pretty cool, don’t you think?

Catch me if you can

Is this the way to do it?  The Hello Puppets! graphic provides a very cool cover, the graphics are soft and cute, the hand of a puppet is really recognizable, I don't have to explain to you why I like it, it already shows in the gameplay and is one of the big reasons why I was so fascinated about Hello Puppets!.

What's new:

Paper is proud to bring you this once-in-a-lifetime deal! Fancy yourself a fool about virtual reality? Or maybe you're a VR content developer looking to tighten the No. 1 VR gloves? Then this is for you. Way back in 2016, my buddy Teddy at Zinrai Studios posted something on our Facebook page and it was that high-pitched, jangle-y tingling sound that you got in your head if you've ever taken one of those bracelets when you're about to go on vacation. I see him as much as I can these days because he's gone deep on VR this year; we had a lengthy webinar together about the nascent VR content market and it seemed like we probably had mutual interests in that. But that one time back then was the first time I remember him, and its been a few years since then. Anyhow, this was his comment in that post: Hey, guys! For the last 3 years, we have been producing education videos for Google Cardboard and Daydream. I am kind of a glutton for punishment when it comes to this stuff and really enjoy it. I have always wanted to try my hand at creating an interactive experience around virtual reality. At the time, that seemed like a very ambitious goal to me. Today, it might not seem too ambitious for his chops, but back then I actually thought he was crazy for wanting to go there without any prior VR game or interactive experience under his belt. So today, I can almost guarantee you, in a world we live in that we live in now, that doesn't even begin to say what Teddy could have delivered a reasonable opinion to the industry a few years from now! But here we are today, and we're gonna work on it together - hence the name of this fine place - and I feel good about it because I know he's a smart guy and he's not just here to make my wife's socks do crazy things. So how about it: Interested in a virtual reality content experience? Interested in a long-term relationship with me for crafting VR games and/or training videos? Interested in a relationship with Teddy, who has a very big mind in this space, to help guide you through the looming medium and industry of VR? Willing to work on
