I think that the election going on have started and there is a lot of votes to be cast, otherwise anyone would only vote for an established candidate. I don't know why votes are being added to this question (and others) into the unanswered list, it is still unsolved. Is there any official (or wiki) statement about this? A: A candidate was removed from the site two weeks ago, causing the election to be reopened. After that happened, some 50 to 60 votes were added from a new user who had just joined the site, none of which were accepted by the community, so now 10 votes are on that page. If there's a candidate that someone dislikes, they might add them to the list and just sit on the votes, but given the 50 votes minimum to keep the list up-to-date, they don't actually add them without at least some community approval. Eventually some of those will reach the end of the queue and then be reviewed and accepted. This is a very standard thing that can happen with elections. Q: What are some good techniques to help develop meditation skills? I've been meditating for several years, but still don't have any concrete techniques to focus on. What are some techniques that others have found helpful for learning meditation? A: Some great books that I have read that have helped me along the way: "The Art of Living" by Sri Ramakrishna "Give Me Liberty or Give Me Death" by John Adams "Silent Spring" by Rachel Carson "The Spirit of Zen" by Eido Roshi "How to Meditate" by Ajahn Sumedho "Silence" by Krishnamurti The internet is rife with quotes, posts, and comments that can be quite helpful for beginners. A few free sites that I also like to visit: Daily Zen Meditation Tips for Beginners If you have a specific question about a technique, or if you want to test out a technique, feel free to ask about it in the comments. As you get more experienced, techniques will
