Ampton ZX-41D3LM Z420-S1.[Treatment for non-small-cell lung cancer with bone metastasis--surgical resection vs. chemotherapy]. Non-small-cell lung cancer (NSCLC) with bone metastasis is a poor prognostic cancer, due to the occurrence of pathological fracture and spinal cord

The complexity of the development of obesity in children and the impact of a range of personal, social, and environmental factors means that traditional multilevel approaches to intervention are inadequate. Recent developments in social network analysis are providing a tool for exploring how different layers of a social network influence individuals' risk of developing and maintaining obesity. Network approaches provide a framework that can be used to identify factors at multiple levels of influence that may be amenable to change. These approaches have potential implications for understanding and influencing the development of obesity in children.

Aminoglycoside resistance in Pseudomonas aeruginosa in burn patients.

Forty-nine burn patients with documented Pseudomonas aeruginosa infection were studied for the resistance of four aminoglycosides to 19 P. aeruginosa strains isolated from their wound or sputum. All strains were susceptible to amikacin, gentamicin, netilmicin and tobramycin, with the exception of one amikacin-resistant strain. Our data indicate that the majority of P. aeruginosa isolates from burn patients are sensitive to all of the aminoglycosides tested. The exception is a possible
