Frequently, these containers are sealed with plastic or metallic lids that must be removed to gain access to the interior of the container. In this regard, U.S. Pat. No. 4,095,858 to Parrotta discloses a tool for removing the lids of containers of the spout and lock-in-place type. The tool in this patent includes a pair of elongate jaws formed at their outer ends with wrenching edges designed to facilitate the removal of lids from containers of the spout and lock-in-place type. The tool of the type taught by the Parrotta '858 patent is intended to be used on heavy-duty containers, i.e., containers with thick sidewalls that are capable of containing heavy and rough-handling objects. In this regard, the Parrotta '858 patent discloses that the outer ends of the jaws have teeth that are designed to bite into the sides of the containers to facilitate the removal of the lids from containers of the spout and lock-in-place type. Unfortunately, due to the heavy-duty nature of the tool, the jaws of the tool are exposed to wear and are liable to break. Further, the jaws are attached to the body of the tool with a pair of bolts. Accordingly, the bolts are subject to fatiguing and loosening, which is frequently accompanied by loosening of the jaws. In other tools, the jaw members are pivotally mounted to the body of the tool. In this regard, U.S. Pat. No. 3,579,908 to Nusbaum discloses a tool for removing lids from containers 0cc13bf012
