But these days, the good old fighting games are more about the business of going up and down the release continuum. Which is good for everyone. And so it is that the year of the release of the PlayStation 4 is also the year that the console is the fastest rising platform. The games are so hot, they're literally like ice bombs. And the companies are flinging them with snowballs at rival platforms and players. (The PlayStation 4 is the only platform on this list that's releasing this year.) Now, I have to disclaim a few things. First, I'm not a PlayStation 4 guy. But the PS4 isn't just rising. It's the first major new platform in several years, with plenty of big name, hot IPs and a whole lot of prestige. I'm still a PlayStation 3 guy through and through, but I've played plenty of PlayStation 4 games. Second, I'm not a Sony guy. But Sony is in an interesting position, and it's resulted in some excellent rivalries and good performances for the PlayStation brand. So all you PS4 owners, you're among friends here. We can all get along. Third, I'm a gamer, and I'm here to work. We're going to play games. And we're going to throw some barbs at each other. But we're going to do it civilly and with some respect. And I'm going to talk to you. I'm going to talk to each and every one of you, even the PlayStation 3 gamers, and you'll see why. Because here's what the year of the PlayStation 4 has given us. How can I send touch events to the table view so they are reflected in the cells? What I have tried: self.tableView.userInteractionEnabled = NO A: You should be able to subclass UITableView, assign it as a custom delegate/data source, and use `-[UITableView touchesBegan:withEvent:]`, which would be sent to the custom delegate, which can set a flag indicating it's a touch event, or `-[UITableView touchesCancelled:withEvent:]`, which would only be sent to the custom delegate if the user definitely ended the touch event. The military's interest in the company has been a long-standing secret, but it was revealed by Elon Musk himself during a video interview. He stated that the U.S. military was planning on buying over a million vehicles for testing purposes. No further detail was given. Musk also disclosed during the interview, "Tesla only want to sell their cars to two types of people. People who can afford $70,000 cars and people who can afford to buy Teslas." While it is tempting to say that Tesla is only for the rich, that is not the case. The biggest markets for Tesla's cars are China and the U.S. About 90 percent of the vehicles sold in China come from Tesla and less than 1 percent of them come from other domestic car manufacturers, according to a report by the Auto Alliance. About 80 percent of the cars sold in the U.S. come from American-made cars, so if Tesla has anything to say about it, it should be the buyers of expensive cars. Some may be concerned with the price of the vehicle, but not all cars are made equal. A 2018 Tesla Model 3 with a 75 kWh battery pack costs $39,500 before incentives, while a comparable BMW 3-Series costs $62,000. However, a
