So this is the first time in many decades that revenue has fallen. Here's how the national debt has grown since 1953: And here's the federal deficit since 1953 (if you are familiar with this, you might notice that the chart looks like the one above minus the black line): As it stands, we have 16 fiscal years to go before Social Security begins to run out of money. The Congressional Budget Office projects that the debt will be about 83% of GDP when the time comes. Assuming we have "normal" tax revenues will are serious conversation about reforming entitlements. It has to start somewhere, and a tax on earnings is a good to the deficit, but I'd like to point out that without it, the deficit would be about $100 billion higher. Yes, we're way past due for a serious conversation about reforming entitlements. It has to start somewhere, and a tax on earnings is a good place to start. The old story is old because it's true. We have a debt problem, but we have an entitlements
