Move from Elle Dangerous to Oculus Rift by Google CardboardInvolvement of tyrosine kinase activity in the biological response to tissue factor expressed by human breast cancer cells. We sought to elucidate mechanisms underlying the transmembrane signal transduction induced by human tissue factor (TF) in human breast cancer cells. Both K-562, a human chronic myelogenous leukemia cell line, and MCF-7, a human epithelial breast tumor cell line, were responsive to stimulation with recombinant human soluble TF. Both cell lines expressed TF mRNA and TF protein on their surfaces, and both cells internalized and processed exogenous TF. Pretreatment with bisindolylmaleimide (BIM), a tyrosine kinase inhibitor, resulted in decreased chemotactic and DNA synthesis responses to TF. Tyrosine phosphorylation of cellular proteins by TF was detected in both K-562 and MCF-7 cells, and TF transphosphorylated v-src, a nonreceptor tyrosine kinase, and phosphorylated a 60-kDa cellular protein. Cell-attached cross-linking of TF to monoclonal antibody activated an endogenous tyrosine kinase activity, which was inhibited by preincubation with BIM. We conclude that tyrosine kinase activity plays an essential role in the transmembrane signal transduction of TF expressed by cancer cells.The most frequent type of body piercing involves piercing the ear lobes in the shape of a cross. In this respect, a liquid crystal display (LCD) device is among the most widely used flat panel displays, and the market has been expanding over these years. The LCD device operates in such a manner that a liquid crystal material is sandwiched between two glass substrates and the molecular arrangement of the liquid crystal molecules in the liquid crystal material is changed by an electric field. The LCD device is widely used in a large screen device, such as televisions, because the LCD device can make the device be thin and lightweight and achieve a high contrast ratio and a high response speed. However, the LCD device is significantly restricted in view angle because it utilizes an optical anisotropy of a liquid crystal molecule. Thus, a wide view angle display device that can overcome the restriction in view angle caused by the LCD device has been proposed. In particular, an LCD device including a multi-domain vertical alignment (MVA)

93 SHARES Facebook Twitter Linkedin Reddit Courtesy of publisher Psytec Games, we've got a great promo for Aura.au 's upcoming horror game, which takes advantage of Oculus' new Rift S LCD. Update (4/7/2020): The 'horror' demo is still available to download. It's a slightly janky demo on Oculus' Gear VR with wobbly graphics and sound, but still peeks the essential gameplay features of the game. Aura.au has announced a free VR horror game for March 31st, following up on its teaser with the song "Loudness" from their debut soundtrack, released on March 10th. If you haven't heard of the game yet, Aura.au's own words: "Aura is a dark VR story of death and the hungry supernatural. Follow our lead as we see the afterlife in a new light. We welcome you to the world of Aura, where time bends to its own sick sense of rhythm and where the dead offer you their knowledge to learn the universal truth of death." Up until a few days ago, prior to the release of their second teaser, Aura's developer Psytec Games revealed little about their project with just a single teaser video posted to Youtube on February 17th. Evidently, that first teaser wasn't met with the number of views they hoped. So they released their followup, "Loudness" on the 10th which features a production team singing an aching rendition of all the corpse-posessed gore of Aura. To read more on Aura, visit the official website or check out the Psytec Games Youtube channel.
