The generation of spatiotemporal heterogeneity in a two-dimensional coarsening system. We report the first experimental observation of spatiotemporal heterogeneity in two-dimensional (2-D) planar reaction-diffusion systems undergoing kinetic arrest. The experiments are performed in a time-resolved microscope setup that tracks both the reaction-diffusion dynamics and an ensemble of phase-separated domains. In this setup we observe a transient "pile up" of domains on both sides of the domain wall separating two areas where phase separation has occurred and a regular oscillatory movement of the domain walls with a square root law. These experimental features are examined theoretically by a dynamical mean-field model where we obtain the magnitude of the domain wall velocity as a function of the domain size. The strong size dependence is contrasted with the regular oscillatory motion of the wall for the oscillatory reaction-diffusion models discussed in the literature.
