Central nervous system (CNS) infection with one of these viruses is a well-established animal model for human AIDS. As a model for viral persistence and pathogenesis in the CNS, we are using a murine model system. We have developed a prototype two-step infection protocol for the J-LacZ recombinant of the Friend Retrovirus (FLR). In this protocol, the immune response is elicited prior to the establishment of persistence. This protocol is unique in that it allows the clear separation of persistence from the immune response. We will study the mechanism by which neurons become infected. We will study the sequence requirements for infection. We will ask whether the cells that support persistent infection are the cells that generate immune response. We will study the control of the infection in the different anatomical regions of the brain. In addition, this model is being used to study the effect of the 6d1f23a050
