Indian Railways, India's largest employer, has not revealed exactly how many employees are in its fold but has said that the total strength of Railway employees is around 2.74 crore. Now, the news about the strike is sure to worry citizens and commuters alike. But, is the strike a justified step? And, will it affect the commuters? Vivek Kumar Srivastava, a senior advocate of Delhi High Court, explains in this video how the strike will work. The Indian Railway System is a vital source of employment and the country also depends heavily on its services. Therefore, any step towards stopping the spread of coronavirus can be considered justified. It's also a shame that the striking is being carried out when lakhs of passengers are at risk of being stranded when they reach their respective places of work. Also read: Coronavirus: How many cases there are, how to identify suspect cases and know more about the disease Weighing the costs and the benefits Since there are no solid data to support the views of the Indian Railway employees, what is likely to be the outcome of the strike? According to a 2018 article by The Hindu Businessline, the salary of most of the railway employees, including the force strength, is Rs 8,500 per month. IRCTC alone employs around 1 lakh employees. It therefore means that, if the government fails to provide stringent travel restrictions and lock down the transportation network entirely, the loss of revenue is estimated to be Rs 1,000 crores in a day. When one considers that the Indian economy has already been facing a slowdown, the expenses related to the outbreak 6d1f23a050
