Many of South Korea's chaebol date to the period of Japanese occupation before the end of World War II, modeling themselves after Japan's powerful industrial and financial conglomerates, known as zaibatsu. As U.S. and international aid flowed into Seoul [PDF] following the Korean War (1950-1953), the government provided hundreds of millions of dollars in special loans and other financial support to chaebol as part of a concerted effort to rebuild the economy, especially critical industries, such as construction, chemicals, oil, and steel. Market cap: $3.5 billion P/E: N/A Samsung Electronics Co is the world's largest chipmaker. The firm was started by Lee Byung-chul, the younger brother of South Korea's founding president, in 1938 as a hardware-testing manufacturer. The company officially became Samsung in 1945, while continuing to grow, and then moved into computers in the 1990s. Its semiconductor business, which produces memory chips, is the largest in the world. The firm is named after Samsung founder Lee Byung-chul and his descendants. Its recent release of a new microchip-producing plant in South Korea on Feb 3 helped spur a rally in South Korea stock in February. The tech bellwether, however, is down 15.5 percent in the past 12 months to July 10. Firms that sell technology-oriented goods generally do well in South Korea. But more recently, the rally in share prices and rising prices of memory chips have begun to temper gains for the firms most involved in supplying them. Even so, analysts expect them to outperform in the future. Park Jeong-tae, chairman of the Korea Productivity Center, told Reuters in April that the firm's tech businesses had witnessed continued strong growth in the latest quarter, with memory prices reaching a record high of $775 per gigabyte in the first quarter. More recently, analysts are betting on the possibility that the firm will ink a deal in the near future to build chips for IBM Corp, another tech giant. The news has sent the company up 14.3 percent this year. Reuters analysts said last week that while Samsung was unlikely to announce a deal in the near term, there had been no developments to suggest that the two firms were likely to enter into one. 5ec8ef588b
