Skyrim Update Version 1.9.32.0.8

at a glance they didn't make much of an impact until i looked at the updates that accompany them. if you're not familiar with creation club you can read more about it on its bethesda site. it basically lets you write mods for the game and submit them to a system, and then when they get approved you can download them for free on steam, where they are automatically distributed along with the game. these particular updates are maintenance patches that add load times to several skyrim cutscenes and then update the game's images for the morrowind/cyrodiil outskirts to match the current look. given that they're just cosmetic updates, this doesn't seem particularly significant, but it will remove some of the "new and improved" look and feel that is somewhat popular in the creation club sections of steam. it also means that you can now have the ability to perform a short cutscene during loading screens to see what the party is up to! this tutorial shows you how to do that, but the catch is that it'll mess up the way your load times are calculated. specifically it sets your total load time to a value between 0 and 15, with a step size of 2 (any value above 15 will trigger an early load). so if you have 25, 14, 11, 5, 9, 5, 3, etc load times and you use this feature, the last 5 values will get chopped off due to the margin of error on the "target" load time. unless there's no error, i'm still wondering if there are any benefits to doing this. it certainly doesn't seem like it should have any kind of noticeable impact. since we're talking about the creation club updates, the first one is something i've wanted to see for a while - the ability to get an orange glow from torches. truth be told i've done this already by playing an old mod that switches out the metal bars in skyrim to torches that glow. i've made a small spoiler image just for this section. click it if you want to be extra nasty:

the skyrim anniversary edition is now available for the ps4 and xbox one via the playstation store and xbox games store. the anniversary edition includes skyrim in its most complete form, with access to the creation club - an active membership which grants you access to additional content and game-only items - and all of the game's add-ons and expansions. it's also discounted when compared to the full game at $50. the game is available for $50 as part of the package, or $40 separately on the xbox one. the skyrim creation club is available for ps4 and xbox one and grants players access to more content than the standard version, including dragonborn, oblivion rebuilt, oblivion dawnguard, barrow-down, and the hearthfire expansion. it's available for $20 for ps4 and xbox one and $10 separately for the xbox one. the ps4 package is available for $50 as part of the package, or $40 separately on the console. the creation club is also available for the ps3 and xbox 360, but the discounts are nowhere near the same. they aren't the most interesting things, but it's also by far the biggest update i've made to skyrim: legendary edition so far. of course, that doesn't mean there aren't plenty of bugs in there. a number of which will be fixed in a future update if not fixed by then, i'm sure. of course, you should probably run a full game check before you update. as should you before you install any mod. well, the main new feature is the new steam workshop. and by "new" i mean it's been in the game since the start, but only now does it function. some mods have been updated to work with the new system, however. if you're really excited, have a look at the manual mod section of the workshop. most mods work as expected, but i can't guarantee that. 5ec8ef588b
