Intrathoracic soft-tissue tumors: MDCT- and MR-based characterizations. To evaluate the roles of multi-detector computed tomography (MDCT) and magnetic resonance (MR) imaging in the identification of the tissue components within intrathoracic soft-tissue masses and to correlate MDCT findings with the final diagnosis. Twelve patients with thirteen intrathoracic soft-tissue masses were examined with preoperative MDCT and MR imaging. The original CT and MR data were evaluated by three observers for characterization, and final diagnosis was determined by histologic or surgical findings. As a result, hyaline cartilage was identified in seven masses (53%), cartilage and fibrous tissue in two, cartilage and adipose tissue in two, cartilage and fibrous tissue and fat in one, and fat in three. Focal areas of calcification were seen in only two masses (15%). As for the final diagnosis, the thirteen masses were five meningiomas, three schwannomas, two neurofibromas, one ganglioneuroma, and two lipomas. The identification of different tissue components using MDCT and MR imaging contributed to the adequate characterization of intrathoracic soft-tissue masses.Q: Control Heroku SQS queue size I've got a python app that is receiving data from an 04aeff104c
