Basically, the graph updates every X seconds, and it will only ever have X points, so it won't fill up a screen. The graph would preferably be one small grid of points, not overly fancy. The ultimate would be to have the graph have a moving background of earth and space, and allow me to click a point in space and see it's location relative to earth. I'm thinking: 1) A lot of fast flickering, points on a picturebox. The picturebox is too small for earth. 2) How could I have it do continuous updates? Does someone know a way to have a client call a server every X time and have it return a string of numbers and the bit of data for each x,y point? 3) Any other idea that you think would be interesting? A: I would suggest that you look into building out a simulation. I am currently working on a project where I build out a simulation of the Solar System, and I would recommend that you do 79a2804d6b
