glucuronidation of l-pyroglutamyl-l-tyrosine on the amount of portal blood. Kinetics of the glucuronidation of l-pyroglutamyl-l-tyrosine (PTY) and its hepatic and renal clearance were studied in the rat after intravenous infusion of the compound during a relatively short period of time (approximately 15 min) in comparison to a long-term infusion (24 hr). The results show that the kinetics of PTY glucuronidation are strongly dependent on the amount of portal blood, thus suggesting that the hepatic microsomal enzymes are probably located in the blood vessel wall and their activity is affected by the hepatic blood flow. The renal clearance of the compound has a different pattern: it is independent of the hepatic blood flow. The results suggest that the hepatic and renal clearance may take place in different nephron segments. the next steps. The genius also asks what you believe will be the most appropriate card to take over your life.
