The G7 summit in a nutshell: Canada, Japan, Germany, Italy, France, the United States and the United Kingdom are the seven economies that make up the so-called G7, the official name for the group of the world's richest nations that also includes Brazil, the European Union, India, Mexico and the European Union. On Wednesday morning, leaders will take part in a leaders' meeting at a resort hotel in the Canadian province of Charlevoix, which will include a "day of action," where each country will present a briefing on the state of their economy. AD AD Canada's chief government economist, Stephen Brown, said in his briefing Wednesday that the event is expected to focus on the currency, the Canadian dollar, and trade. "The Canadian economy is on the threshold of a possible recession and the election means that the country faces a very uncertain future," Brown told reporters in Ottawa. The fight between Canada and the U.S. has taken the spotlight at recent summits, with Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's plan to impose tariffs on the country's trade partners turning that fight into an international economic one. Though Trump and Trudeau have been conducting a battle of words on Twitter and in public since before last year's G7 meeting in Biarritz, France, they haven't been trading insults at the official level since they clashed at the meeting. AD A Canadian official, speaking on the condition of anonymity, said the issue of NAFTA took precedence over other disagreements at last year's G7 summit and Trudeau largely avoided mentioning Trump in his public remarks. AD Brown, the chief economist, said the subject of trade will be revisited at Wednesday's meeting, as will the U.S.-Canada trade deal. On that topic, he said there isn't much progress to report. "At the end of the day, the parties have to complete the negotiation," he said. Trudeau, whose progressive economic approach was mocked by critics at last year's
